

The Global Church Is Standing with Ukraine for the Long Term

Established by the World Evangelical Alliance (WEA), The Response - Ukraine Special Task Force (TRUST) is coordinating efforts with evangelical churches in Ukraine and neighboring countries to serve the immediate and long-term needs of those affected by the war.

What's the latest situation?

7 million
internally displaced people¹

7.2 million
refugees in European countries²

13 million
stranded in affected areas³

- Fighting and shelling continue in eastern and southern Ukraine, and strikes in other areas have caused additional destruction of civilian infrastructure and a large number of civilian deaths and injuries. The civilian toll has reached 14,000 confirmed deaths since the beginning of the war.⁴
- Nearly 18 million people – 40 per cent of the country's population – need humanitarian assistance, and the situation is expected to deteriorate further in the winter months.⁵
- As villages and towns are being liberated from Russian occupation as part of Ukraine's ongoing counteroffensive, significant needs remain. Many communities still lack access to clean water, electricity, and cell service, and also face challenges with limited food supplies. The clean-up and rebuilding effort will also take some time.

What are the needs?

Humanitarian needs⁶

9.3 million people

need food and livelihood assistance

14.5 million people

need health assistance

11.2 million people

need shelter and non-food items

17.7 million people

- The war has caused US$108 billion in damage to Ukraine's infrastructure.⁸
- 140,000 residential buildings and 114,700 private homes have been destroyed.⁹
- At least 240 church buildings have been damaged.¹⁰

Voices from the front Ivan Rusin

President of Ukrainian Evangelical Theological Seminary and Deputy Bishop of the Ukrainian Evangelical Church

"99% of our faculty and staff were refugees, and our students are scattered all around the world. Our campus was shelled by Russian forces, and impacted by Russian bombs. But also, this war opened absolutely new opportunities for us in a missional sense. We had the chance to serve our nation as never before.

I am very proud to see what evangelical churches are doing right now in Ukraine. This is a unique ministry that we have.

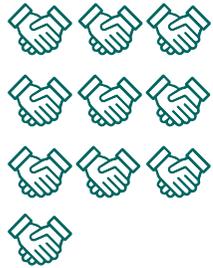

And on behalf of Ukrainian Christians, I would like to say thank you to the World Evangelical Alliance for supporting us from the first day of the war. Your support is crucial for our relief ministry in Ukraine."

Responding to Tragedy Begins with the Church United

A survivor being evacuated.

“While the war in Ukraine is a tragic situation, it’s also an opportunity to strengthen unity between Christians and to develop models for long-term collaboration.”

Ruslan Maliuta is a Ukrainian Evangelical who oversees TRUST, a task force established by the World Evangelical Alliance (WEA) to support and strengthen collaboration among the churches and ministries directly responding to the war. Although the WEA has not historically raised funds to respond to emergencies, established relationships and a providential connection left them well positioned to respond in Ukraine.

Yuriy Kulakevych, a leader in the Ukrainian Pentecostal Church, says Ukraine’s churches were the first to respond. While the government scrambled to mobilize defenses, it was churches that began evacuating civilians from combat zones, offering them shelter in church buildings and members’ homes. Within two weeks, many churches had exhausted their funds buying gas to transport refugees and food to feed them.

With trusting relationships already forged, existing financial agreements allowed the WEA to transfer money directly to the churches and ministries in Ukraine, while many organizations were still arranging logistics. By the fourth week of the war, the WEA had already provided $210,000 to Ukrainian church networks.

Maliuta underscores that the WEA is a church-focused alliance with a vision beyond the immediate relief efforts.

“We want to come alongside and strengthen the Evangelical communities in Ukraine and other countries as they serve people affected by the war.”

Evangelicals Discuss Strategic Collaboration at Ukraine Partnering Summit “Today for Tomorrow”

Ukrainian fortitude and resourcefulness have repeatedly shocked the world over the past six months. This is not just true of their military but the people too, and especially the Ukrainian church.

To strengthen their united voice and amplify it to the world, the Council of Evangelical Churches of Ukraine and World Evangelical Alliance (WEA) brought together leading Christians from across the region for a two-day summit, titled “Today for Tomorrow.”

Summit participants in prayer

“We had a great and fruitful time, where we were able to discuss the current situation as leaders of different Evangelical denominations,” says Victor Pavovski, Senior Bishop of the Moldovan Pentecostal Union. “The complete unity of all participants was also a visible display of how churches may be of help to needy people inside the country of Ukraine and abroad.”

The summit’s participants released a resolution to highlight some of these key messages.

As Ukrainian and Central and Eastern European churches refocus on long-term needs and strategies, they have also begun planning a larger gathering for this fall. They hope to bring together a broader group of leaders, including service organizations and other ministries, with a goal to foster further collaboration and greater unity.

“We are working to identify how there can be an ongoing conversation,” Ruslan Maliuta says, “between leaders in Ukraine, leaders in neighboring countries, and globally speaking in the Church.”

Church for the City in Poland provides long term refuge

Children activities in KDM temporary shelter

When the war started, the Church for the City of Krakow (KDM) was a youth-oriented church in the second biggest city in Poland. When refugees began arriving in the city, located less than 250 kilometers from the Ukrainian border, the church started to receive them. At a Sunday service, the church leadership was approached by a local businessman, who offered his hotel as a temporary refugee shelter. Shortly after, they decided to transform this arrangement into a long-term, multi-partnership project targeted at housing over 1,000 refugees over a period of six months.

Unlike most temporary shelter providers at the time, KDM did not operate as a short-term rest area where refugees would stop for 1-3 days and then move on. Instead, they had a vision and deep understanding of the importance of stability and consistency for refugees who were in a foreign country with no plan or assets in place. With this in mind, they decided to focus on long-term housing in dedicated facilities. Over the past months and to this day, KDM has been working to secure funding and other resources for their project while simultaneously opening and operating new facilities. They are cooperating with the city authorities, who consider them a trustworthy operation and direct refugees to them.

Several facilities are currently operating, with some functioning since the first days of the war. In those facilities, dedicated staff members, coordinators, and specialized professionals are working to provide their guests with everything they need while providing holistic care and legal and psychological assistance.

OpSafe launches trauma-care camps for young children

Children’s Mission - a Ukrainian training-equipping ministry, has teamed up with OpSafe - an international organization that provides trauma care for young children, to set up trauma care camps in Ukraine.

OpSafe trauma care camps are organized similar to five-day vacation Bible school, located in a population center, where children usually spend up to 4 hours of their day. Participants, who are 6-12 years old, are split into small groups of 5-6 children, which are then assigned a mentor who works with them for the duration of the camp. Together, they go through various “stations,” where they study the Bible, play, discuss, and learn therapeutic techniques.

Children’s Mission has reported that 20% of children who go through these camps discover that they have a deeper trauma and are assisted by their mentors in understanding it. Among these children, 2-5% require professional psychological assistance and are directed to local professionals. In two months of OpSafe operating in Ukraine, their teams, trained and supervised by Children’s Mission, have held 31 camps and reached 1,700 children. Additional camps are also being planned. OpSafe, Children’s Mission, and their teams plan to continue their efforts and reach as many children as possible.

Therapeutic storytelling for children.

WEA Networks in action

Peace and Reconciliation Network: Providing trauma care for the war-affected

Children activities at counseling center.

As the war in Ukraine moves tragically past the six-month mark, the Peace and Reconciliation Network is collaborating with other WEA Public Engagement ministries to assess the scope of existing trauma-response work and expertise in Ukraine and in the border countries. This work includes establishing and financially seeding counseling centers that can provide immediate trauma-care for those displaced by the war, be a trauma-care resource for local churches and their leaders and become hubs for ongoing development of peace and reconciliation in their context.

For example, PRN is partnering with the Latvian Biblical Center in Riga, Latvia that will make it possible for a program leader and facility to function for at least one year. The desire is to see similar centers formed over the next number of months.

European Freedom Network: Long-term needs cannot be forgotten

The war has caused significant and widespread damage to homes and infrastructure

With the winter months approaching and battle fronts expanding the situation remains far from stable and there is still potential for a new wave of refugees.

Those who have already fled Ukraine are becoming increasingly vulnerable to homelessness as funding and public support begin to wane; the number of Ukrainians in need of homes in the United Kingdom, for example, has already doubled.

Difficulties in finding work and becoming integrated into host country support services, such as education, are also creating new challenges for Ukrainian refugees.

The European Freedom Network urges the global church community to remain engaged and continue their support and prayer for war-affected Ukrainians in and outside the country. There is a long road ahead.

Funding

To-date:

US$1.6 million

has been dispersed by WEA to partner networks in Ukraine and neighboring countries to provide greatly needed aid, support, and care for children, families, and communities affected by the war.

Our goal is to continue raising funds to strengthen Evangelical churches and ministries in the region and to build their capacity to provide short- and long-term support so that the people of Ukraine can rebuild their lives and their country.
